THE MONEY MARKET.

THE position of the money market is but little altered this week. The contraction of the circulation of the Bank of England since the month of September began has enabled the reserve to reach again nearly the point at which it stood a month ago. A reserve of fully 16,600,000*l* may be taken to be sufficient for any probable demands, though when contrasted with the position of a twelvemonth ago, the figures seem comparatively small:—

RESERVE BANK OF ENGLAND.

	£
1879, September 17	22,100,000
1880 „ 15	16,600,000
Less at date	5,500,000

It may be hoped that the reserve will not be allowed to drop to the figures which it has occasionally reached in former years, and that the Bank, in view of the recent great growth of its deposits, will aim for the future at a reserve of 15,000,000*l* rather than of a lower amount as its normal figure.

For the immediate future no great change in the position of the money market seems probable. An adverse movement in the American exchange appears the only thing likely to stir the English market. The rate, which has been reported fractionally better from New York to-day, still stands just above the point at which a remittance of specie is profitable. So long as it hangs about at this point there must be some uncertainty as to the future, but there seems no reason at present to expect that the quantity which will be taken this year from this country, will approach the sum which was taken last year.

The incidence of the demand for specie for export to the United States has, at present, been rather on France and Germany than on this country. The condition of the harvest in Europe may be taken to explain this. The harvest of this year appears to have been worse in the Eastern portions of Europe than in the Western. The French harvest has not turned out of the quality which was expected. The position of Germany in respect of food supplies is always much influenced by that of Russia, and the Russian harvest is stated to be distinctly deficient. These circumstances have directed the demand of gold for export to the United States in the first instance on France and Germany rather than on England.

That some specie will be required from this country for this purpose is probable. But it is also probable that what we may expect to receive from Australia will go far to make up for this. Meanwhile, the prosperity which continuous good harvests has brought to the United States is showing its fruit in stimulating imports of various kinds. America is a country in which personal expenditure plays a larger part in influencing trade than in this or in any old settled country. It is also a country in which the immediate results of good times produce a quicker effect on trade than here. There is less inclination to save in a new country in which the rate of profit is high than in an old country in which the rate of profit is low, and in which saving is, so to say, hereditary, and is known to be the sheet anchor of business life. The old experience repeats itself; what has come easily goes easily. We have heard of transactions, telling up to large figures, in woollen goods, in articles for personal use, in silk, and in other articles of luxury. Money's worth,
